SEMI-SOLID WOOD FLOORING

Hazel collection

Choosing semi-solid wood flooring allows you to enjoy wood flooring solutions even in rooms with fluctuating temperatures and moisture levels. The reason for calling this flooring option semi-solid is because of its construction. A solid wood floor is made with only solid wood; in other words, it is made up entirely of wood planks. For example, if you choose solid oak flooring, each board will be cut from oak that has been lumbered and graded. Semi-solid wood flooring is made up of a core board of layers and layers of ply that are bonded together to create a solid and stable base upon which a layer of solid wood is fixed

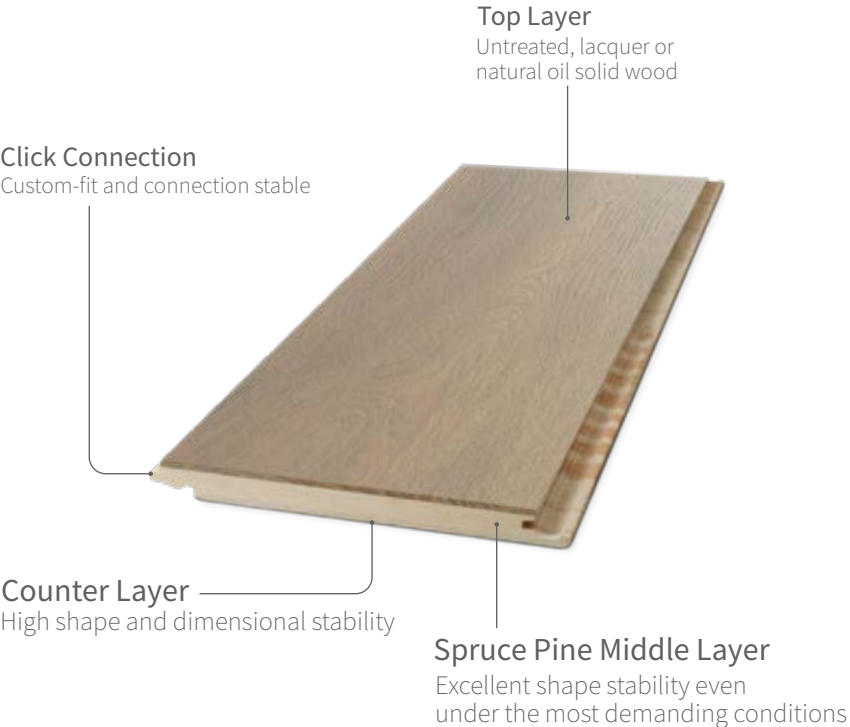

Other Features of Semi-Solid Wood Flooring

-  Easy cleaning
-  No Color fading
-  Heat insulator
-  Shock absorbent
-  Scratch-resistant
-  Cigarette ash resistant
-  Wear and tear-resistant
-  Stain-resistant
-  Easy fixing
-  Easy re-installation

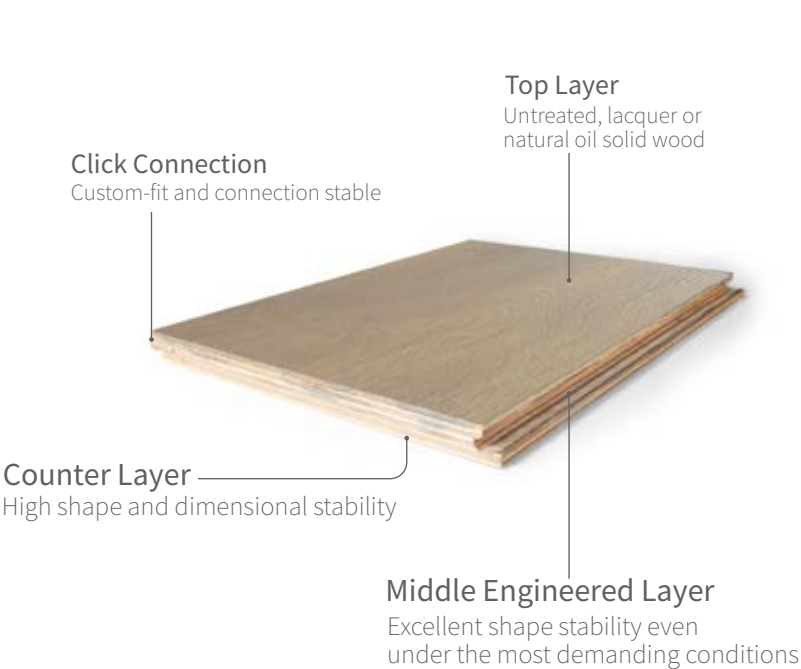

Engineered Wood Flooring Structure

Engineered wood flooring is a type of engineered wood flooring that has been produced on a factory line using cedar, oak or other species. Engineered hardwood floors are constructed with a core layer of solid strips of wood, which is then covered with either softwood or hardwood veneers.
